Jewish Parenting Tip

One of my favorite summer parenting tips to share is how to stay jewish over the summer:

Light Shabbat candles is one great example. The rhythm of our week often changes over the summer without school every morning forcing us all up and out. Yet Shabbat is still on the same schedule. Make sure you and your children come together to light Friday evening candles and share your rituals that glue you together all year.

Another easy way to stay jewishly connected over the summer is volunteer! Remember in December when everyone was focused on elders and hospitals? Now is time to focus on tikkun olam--not just at holidays. Visiting the sick and the elderly are year round mitzvot. Cleaning up a neighborhood park is another every day mitzvah. So use the summer's long days to knock out more "connectors" or mitzvot as a family!

Blessings and make this world warmer inside and out!--Deb Dusansky, M.A.

26 Miles at the Curious Theatre

26 MILES By Quiara Alegria Hudes

Starting in Philadelphia and ending in Yellowstone's Hayden Valley, the hilarious and charming journey of a vivacious Cuban mother and her lonely, half-Jewish teenage daughter, provokes them to finally voice the tension of different cultural identities and resentments harbored about their ailed relationship. As they unpack their individual baggage about being "outsiders," they discover a commonality they never knew they had.
